Geist reservoir fishing report

Fishing this lake for the first time. The traffic jam was terrible this morning. About 4 miles from the ramp is the Capt n Hook bait shop. Then on Tue and Wed he doesn't open until 1:30pm. Oh really? So I headed to the bait barn in Arlington... Another 12 miles. Got a dozen good minnows 99cent. I'm in the water by 9 at last. Shallow.. The ramp of the motorboat is at the shallow end. I wouldn't open her not knowing the lake very well. The ramp fee was $15 at the other end of the lake and we were shown fish.. 12 to 16 feet of water. We started taking good crap. There are no slabs, but they are better than average. By 1:30pm we had our limit of 50. It was 5pm and we cleaned the fish. Steve was so short of fish that he sent them all home to fill the freezer. The water temperature was 79 - 80. A lot of floating weeds, holding my camera this morning, but is the battery dead? I'll be camping at Summit Lake for nine days next week. It's never been before. Do you guys have any suggestions? We will be at Camp Site 48, look at us HookandBullet.com if you are close. All rights reserved. For more information, see At the Sportsman Store, most people think Geist Reservoir is Indiana's rich and famous playground. But in 2010, Tim Goen and his father made headlines when they accidentally caught 18 inches of huge garbage in a casting net while trying to catch shade near the Olio Road Bridge. They released the living garbage, but not before they took a few quick photos. As rumors flew about their authenticity, photos quickly roamed social media. Goen stepped forward and the uproar of a new national record was only 20 years old. According to Goen, the weight of the rubbish is a huge 4 and a half pounds by anyone's standards, but not enough to break the national record. What are the two good things to remember? The trash is real, and it still likely means swimming at Geist.Geist, like most lakes in Indiana, flooded land to make the Creek Dam and Lake fall. In this case, old winding creek beds and adjacent flood plains make up the main geological feature. Like most fish, krapu is associated with structure. The key to finding structure is a good depth finder. Find the structure and find the fish. Geist Reservoir, unlike many other central Indiana lakes, is surrounded by piers, lip wraps, barriers, bays and other structures perfect for crabpie, so it's a very targeted lake and casual fishermen can be overwhelmed by all the places of fishing. The big question, of course, is how do you find Geist Monster Krapu? For that answer we went to Greg Phillips, a custom bait manufacturer and co-owner of Spider-Lyzin Ziggs. He gave us five of his secret hotspots. At the Sportsman Store Phillips typically starts the day at the launch bar on the same bridge where Goen caught huge rubbish just outside Olio Road. Goen caught the monster garbage right next to the Olio Road Bridge. The map is free from webapp.navionics.com.Hotspot heading west, where he and his partner, Steve Wallace, swing across the lake and along the creek channel. Zigzag the sunken brush and other structures there, as if crossing the middle of the lake. On active days, the fish is loosely associated with the brush, and on hard days after moving forward, deep holes can be drilled. Hotspot 2.As continued west, just north of Marina Pier as he and Wallis passed the Fall Creek Bridge and passageways. The outer row of slips is very close to the creek channel and provides the perfect combination of deep water and piers where fish are also relevant. Phillips explained that there are always fish from spring uniforms to the end of summer. Especially around deep piers in the 12' to 14' range. Phillips and Wallace prefer to use their own brand, Krafu Zig, to use slip-bobber rigs in their area. Phillips and Wallace Tournament Crappy Fish are always looking for better ways to buy pounds well. Like many garbage fishermen, they piled up their zigs twice to increase their offer They designed and built themselves because what they couldn't find was a perfect, properly engineered upper zigzag head. When other crappy pros saw their work, they realized the value of the way Zieghead presents grub or minnows more naturally. Recently, spider-lysine Ziggs' following began to grow with leaps and bounds. While rigging or spider rigging in Geist Reservoir, Philips use chartrous or white 1/16 or 1/8 ounce zig heads. But when things get tough, they fall back on their secret weapons, orange tails and green zigzagheads. Hotspot 3. Heading west from the marina, Phillips and Wallace are fishing funnels or pinch points across the entrance to Fall Creek Road across a short passageway. The entrance is shallow to the north of the lake, so it warms up faster in the spring. Water is just a few degrees warm and everything it takes to attract fish during spawning and spawning. Phillips prefers not to point the mouse at what he considers to be a fish highway. Instead, he is cast into a narrow channel with a garbage spinner that stands off one side or the other. It's really a hotspot. Phillips told us. While shallow, the northern area of the causeway can be very productive. There are so many fish in the heart of spring that it's unbelievable! Phillips laughed. It's a fantastic place when fish spawn. Geist is a target-rich lake for crabpie anglers. Free map from web app.navionics.com.hotspot 4.Heading along the north shore towards the dam is the top top top top top top top of entrances and piers. The brake line into the deep water is quick and pronounced, especially in the short sections where the creek channel veers away after a few hundred yards following a dive about the shore. Fish associated with piers and points can find just movie complexes of tails in the deep sea. Phillips and Wallace often troll the brake line using their spider-lysine krapu spinners 30-40 feet behind the boat, which allows them to dive down 6 or 7 feet. Phillips feels that black, red, white, orange and chartrous are good colors for Geist. A common method is to use dark colors on cloudy days and light colors on bright days. Muddy water after heavy rain demands high visibility zigheads such as chartreus. Shortly after leaving Hotspot 5.Hotspot 4, the creek channel heads straight for the southern coastline and then towards the dam. In doing so, it runs right past the long point and, across the mouth of the big bay, hits the shoreline again. The two places where the creek channel leads close to the shoreline create a good area for spider gear. Fast brake lines in deep water can be a patrol area for large fish that want to ambush small baits. Phillips and Wallace like to cover the breakline slowly with spider rigging and travel at 0.8-0.9 mph. Some garbage fishermen call it legalized because of it. You can effectively cover too much water. Along with scouring the pier along the breakline, Phillips and Wallace head southeast to a large bay, along a line of piers while watching the deep finder. It is well known that many dog owners like to sink artificial structures closer so that they can have their own private honey holes. Like other lakes, keys in places where different types of structures converge, such as wood sunken to the point, hard bends in the creek channel, trees that have fallen next to the creek channel, etc. In the regular pool, Geist Reservoir is 1,900 acres. It is a private lake and has a weekday release fee of $15. Weekends and public holidays are $30, but if you're out of the water by 11 a.m., you'll get $15 back.
